Tamaira Oliveras and Bailey Anne Low presented Antimicrobial Properties of Various Domestic Honey at the 18th annual Penn-York conference for undergraduate research, hosted at Hilbert College on Saturday, November 4, 2017.

This conference gives presenting students the real-world experience of the professional presentations commonly found in academic environments, and it is also an excellent resume-builder for students looking to apply to graduate school. Undergraduates of any field of academic study are invited to submit their research for presentation at the conference. Projects from all disciplines in the behavioral and social sciences, biological, computational and physical sciences, health-related and applied sciences, and humanities were welcomed. In previous years, more than a dozen universities across Pennsylvania & New York have sent their students to present their research in an academic environment.
PTA Students worked with a variety of aged infants and children, assessing and applying developmental milestone skills and reflexes.
Fun times at the Owl Prowl with the Pitt Titusville students.

Dr. Robin Choo's class took a trip to Drake Well State Park to call in great horn owls and enjoy a campfire with smores.
The University of Pittsburgh at Titusville ranked 67 out of 100 as Best Two-Year College for Adult Learners.

Washington Monthly reported that nearly half of all college students are twenty-five years or older and ranked schools that best service the needs of this population. The criteria for this ranking included:

- Flexibility of Programs
- Ease of enrollment
- Services available
- Percentage of adult students attending
- Mean earnings of adult students ten years after admission

Star Gazing Event

Friday, Nov 10
Haskell Auditorium

Two Sessions:
11:00 am and 2:00 pm

Amateur Star Gazer Dean Semenov will bring Sky Lab to the Haskell Auditorium for a day of indoor star gazing. You will learn how to navigate the night sky, identify constellations, and hear various celestial myths surrounding the constellations and how different characters, creatures, and symbols got to be placed among the stars.

Please email Ms. Kenyon to RSVP at mkenny@pitt.edu.
This is a fun way to learn about the night sky AND it counts as a passport event.

The region is at the center of an epidemic, but it isn't an infectious disease. It's an insidious illness that has been quietly spreading in communities, killing more people each year than car crashes—opioid drug overdoses. The number of people dying in the region has more than doubled in the past decade.

This event is open to the community at no charge.
The Pitt-Titusville women's volleyball team had two players named to All-Conference teams, Rebecca Fagley of Greenville, PA and Alexis O’Donnell of Cochranton, PA.
