Next month, Benson Library and the University of Pittsburgh at Titusville will present three evenings of music titled: The Melody Lingers On: A Celebration of the Great American Songbook. The programs will be held in the Benson Library Recreation Room on three consecutive Tuesday evenings, February 9th, 16th, and February 23rd at 6:00. The topics will be The Music of World War II, The Music of Cole Porter, and Fred Astaire and the American Dance Musical.

The programs will be presented by Dr. Phillip Atteberry, who teaches History of Jazz at UPT and who hosts Saturday Swing Session every week on WQLN radio in Erie. Dr. Atteberry has delivered programs on the American popular song for many years. Since the mid 1990’s, he has conducted summer workshops in popular music at the Chautauqua Institute. Since 2001, he has worked for the Pennsylvania Humanities Council, doing programs across the state on Bing Crosby, Irving Berlin, Louis Armstrong and other musical figures.

“American popular music, especially of the early and mid 20th century, is an amazing art form,” says Atteberry. “Not only is it fun to listen to, but the music teaches us a lot about our history and national character.” Atteberry describes himself as a “song geek.” “I’m just interested in old songs,” he explains, “where they came from, who wrote them and why. The backstories are often fascinating, and once you know the back story, you hear different things in the song.”

The programs will be about 45 minutes and include extensive musical excerpts and film clips as well as vintage photographs and sheet music. The programs will be followed by short question and answer periods and light refreshments. All are welcome.
